

PENNSYLVANIA POLITICS.

FUTURE OF THE INDEPENDENT MOVEMENT. IT IS A POLITICAL REVOLUTION!—EARNESTNESS OF ITS SUPPORTERS—DESPERATION OF THE STALWARTS—ATTITUDE OF THE PRESS—THE COLORADO SPRINGS STAFF CORRESPONDENT OF THE TRIBUNE.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Sept. 11.—Any careful observer is slow to predict too much of a political revolt. So many have started out well and ended poorly; the pressure of party regularity is so powerful; men are so apt to yield, even at the last moment, to entreaties of the leaders and press of the party; the drift, toward the end, is so apt to be toward the regular organization, while, at the beginning it may have been away from it—that the future even of a promising movement of this kind is usually uncertain. That of the Pennsylvania Independents is still indefinite to a great degree. The practical work of organization is, in many quarters, just beginning, and the public canvass—the meetings, speeches, etc.—will not fairly open for a week or two yet. There must be considerable progress in this work before any one will be able to form a definite opinion of the vote that is likely to be cast, and of the proportion of the men who are in danger of falling away before election day.

But it is not too early to see that the movement presents all the characteristics of a political revolution, and that the size of the demonstration apparently renders General Beaver's election impossible. The Independent Republicans, as everybody knows, include many of the best citizens in every quarter of the State. They are, as a rule, men who have been waiting for a long time for an opportunity to say what they think of the Cameron methods, and have taken their stand deliberately. As a class, they are not men who can be either bribed or driven. The spirit and determination of these men are noticeable everywhere. The Stalwarts will not be able to start the hue and cry against them that they are joining with the Democrats to overthrow the Republican party. No sentiment receives such hearty applause in independent meetings as that which declares that they are all Republicans and nothing but Republicans, and that they have no sympathy with the Democratic party in the appointment of the remaining Inspectors and poll-clerks. He thought that Messrs. Matthews and Nichols expected the Democratic party to make some arrangement for harmony between the two factions in this city, and it was for that reason that they had asked to have the vote upon the Tammany delegation at the trying Hall delegation, he said, "we would have a right to expect that the entire list of Tammany inspectors and poll-clerks would be appointed."

"Very likely. Something of that kind might happen." If the Tammany delegation is excluded from the convention, will you waive all claims to the appointment of Tammany inspectors?"

"Yes, we will," said Mr. Nichols, knitting his brows, "after the showing which Tammany Hall made at the last election every fair-minded man will admit that the organization is entitled to have a good share of the influence."

In conclusion Mr. Nichols said that he expected an amicable agreement between Mr. Matthews and himself, and that when they presented lists the Commissioners would vote in harmony with them.

the people in the country by means of a thorough school-house canvas. Some of them have been much struck with the recent statement made by Chairman McKee in THE TRIBUNE correspondence showing that Wolfe received almost all of his vote in the counties in which he made speeches. It is true that he probably went to speak where he thought he had more supporters than in other places, but it is also undoubtedly true that his speeches made many votes for him. A number of instances could be given to show that he received a good vote in places where he spoke, and a much smaller vote in places not far off and quite as friendly in which he did not speak.

The colored voters seem to be waking up to the issues at stake, and large numbers of them are believed to be joining the Independents. The support which is given to the movement by a number of their papers and orators is said to be having a marked effect. In the western part of the State this is noticeable, and predictions are made that a majority of the 42,000 colored voters of the State will be given for the Independent ticket.

D. L.

SOME INSPECTORS AND CLERKS NAMED.

The Police Commissioners were unusually busy yesterday, transacting all pressing business in order that they might be able to attend the State political conventions with clear consciences. Much routine business was pushed through the meeting of the board, the members voting harmoniously and rapidly. The on-going resolutions passed were those to appoint the Republican inspectors and poll-clerks for the coming election and to designate the polling places in the various election districts. A polling place for each of the districts was named, subject to a change before election day. In case of an unfavorable report by the commissioners to the appointment of the Republican list of inspectors and poll-clerks was made by Comptroller Matthews, the representative of the County Democracy in the board. No action was taken on the Democratic lists, Mr. Matthews and Mr. Nichols both desiring that action be postponed until after the Syracuse convention. President French said, after the meeting that the Republicans had voted to nominate the same candidates to favor either faction of the Democratic party in the appointment of the remaining inspectors and poll-clerks. He thought that Messrs. Matthews and Nichols expected the Democratic party to make some arrangement for harmony between the two factions in this city, and it was for that reason that they had asked to have the vote upon the Tammany delegation at the trying Hall delegation, he said, "we would have a right to expect that the entire list of Tammany inspectors and poll-clerks would be appointed."

"Very likely. Something of that kind might happen." If the Tammany delegation is excluded from the convention, will you waive all claims to the appointment of Tammany inspectors?"

"Yes, we will," said Mr. Nichols, knitting his brows, "after the showing which Tammany Hall made at the last election every fair-minded man will admit that the organization is entitled to have a good share of the influence."

In conclusion Mr. Nichols said that he expected an amicable agreement between Mr. Matthews and himself, and that when they presented lists the Commissioners would vote in harmony with them.

IRON AND STEEL MANUFACTURES.

DISCUSSING MATTERS CONNECTED WITH AND AFFECTING THE TARIFF.

CRESON SPRINGS, Penn., Sept. 13.—The discussion of iron and steel manufacturers this morning took up the first items of the recommendations of the iron manufacturing companies, namely, an increase of the duty on iron from $7 to $10 per ton. Mr. Bushnell, of New York, thought the convention would postpone the increase of duty on iron until after the election, and that the bill would be introduced in Congress.

In conclusion Mr. Nichols said that he expected an amicable agreement between Mr. Matthews and himself, and that when they presented lists the Commissioners would vote in harmony with them.

THE PRINCESS LOUISE IN DANGER.

THROWS DOWN WHILE MAKING HER TOILET IN A RAILROAD CAR, BUT NOT INJURED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 12.—The Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise and party arrived in this city shortly after 10 o'clock this morning, having been detained about 50 minutes at Port Costa by an accident. They were met upon their arrival by British Consul Bodkin, and proceeded without ceremony to the Palace Hotel.

A discussion arose as to the practice in the District of Columbia courts, and there was a great diversity of opinion expressed. Mr. Nichols, however, said that his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go."

The court said that there had been two motions filed for a new trial, and for the release of the parties on bail pending the appeal which was to be heard in October. The parties will remain in custody to the conclusion of the trial.

Mr. Nichols, in the course of his argument, said his case was to be carried up to the Superior Court.

The Court—"There is a doctrine about going further and going worse;" we expect to go further and have better.

Mr. Nichols then went on to appeal to the court to use its discretion in releasing Mr. Nichols and Bodkin upon bail. He pointed out the impossibility of the court not releasing them, and called attention to the fact that there were strange rumors as to the jury, contending that the jurors for the defense should have been selected from the same class of persons as those of the prosecution. The District Attorney then appealed to the court to prevent their finding these two particular defendants guilty: "though," concluded Mr. Nichols, "it may be wrong now to let them go